the time and way that feels right for you and those around you

What happens when someone dies?

Expected death

If the death was expected and the cause of death is clear, the process should be quite straightforward:

- You need to contact the funeral director to make arrangements to transfer the deceased to their care.
- In all cases the death is reviewed by a Medical Examiner, following referral from and completion of the Death Certificate by the Doctor who cared for the deceased prior to their death. They will talk to you about the cause of death, the Death Certificate and any concerns you may have.
- The Medical Examiner will countersign the Death Certificate for you. This will be emailed directly to the local Registrar.
- You will also be given instructions on how to register the death. This is usually via the council website.

- When contacted, the Registrar will provide the information and forms you need to make the funeral arrangements.
- When all the paperwork has been completed you can start making the funeral arrangements.

Unexpected death

If the death was unexpected and/or the cause of death is unclear:

- The Doctor will report the death to the Coroner.
- The Coroner will liaise with you and the referring Doctor to ascertain the cause of death. In some circumstances this may be after an inquest.
- The Coroner's Office will keep you informed of everything that is happening.
